Nation-wide strike: Workers to down tools Friday. Demand Petrol Price cut to N500

• Approve wage award

BY BONNY AMADI

President Bola Tinubu fail to announce a drastic cut in petrol price and a new national minimum wage in his Independence Day speech

"The three critical issues requiring urgent attention are as follows: reduction of fuel price to N500 per litre. The federal government should take urgent steps to bring down the price of Premium Motor Spirit (PMS) to N500 per litre," the statement reads.

"The Federal Government should urgently approve a wage award for Nigerian workers to cushion the effects of the prevailing harsh economic conditions being experienced by workers, their dependants, and vulnerable Nigerians

"It is imperative to state clearly that the Independence

Sightsavers leads Trachoma elimination efforts in Kebbi communities

BY MUHAMMAD LAWAL

Trachoma, the world's leading infectious cause of preventable blindness, remains one of the most persistent yet avoidable public health challenges in poor and underserved communities.

Although it is both preventable and treatable, the disease continues to affect millions of people globally, especially in rural settings where poverty, inadequate water supply, poor sanitation and limited access to health services intersect.

According to the World Health Organisation (WHO), an estimated 150 million people worldwide live in trachoma-endemic areas, while about 1.9 million people are either blind or visually impaired due to the disease.

Sub-Saharan Africa bears the highest burden, with Nigeria listed among countries where trachoma remains a public health concern, especially in hard-to-reach rural communities.

It is against this backdrop that Sightsavers, an international charity organisation committed to preventing avoidable blindness, fighting Neglected Tropical Diseases (NTDs) and promoting equality for women, girls and persons with disabilities, has intensified its intervention in Kebbi.

For over 75 years, Sightsavers has worked across more than 30 countries in Africa and Asia, supporting governments and local organisations to strengthen health systems.

Its interventions range from training health workers and providing eye surgeries to supporting people with disabilities, improving women's health outcomes and advancing inclusive development.

In Nigeria, Sightsavers has aligned its work with national and sub-national health priorities, especially the elimination of trachoma and other NTDs.

In Kebbi, where environmental and socio-economic factors heighten vulnerability, the organisation has adopted a deliberate community-driven approach.

Rather than focusing solely on medical interventions, Sightsavers has prioritised community engagement as a crucial pathway to sustainable disease elimination.

This approach recognises that long-term success depends on behavioural change, local ownership and strong collaboration among community leaders, government institutions and development partners.

Consequently, Sightsavers Nigeria has been engaging traditional rulers, community heads and religious leaders in Yola community, Augie Local Government Area, to collectively deliberate, brainstorm and agree on practical strategies for eradicating trachoma and other neglected tropical diseases.

Yola community has been identified as vulnerable to trachoma, a bacterial eye infection that spreads through poor hygiene, limited access to clean water and fly transmission.

If left untreated, repeated infection can cause the eyelids to turn inward, leading to corneal damage and irreversible blindness.

To address this challenge, Sightsavers convened a stakeholders' engagement meeting themed: "Promoting Healthy Practices and Strengthening Community Engagement for Facial Cleanliness and Environmental Improvement (F&E)".

The meeting brought together representatives of local government, traditional institutions, religious bodies, state ministries and development partners.

Speaking at the meeting, the Chairman of Augie Local Government Area, Alhaji Yahaya Muhammad-Augie, commended Sightsavers for its intervention and reaffirmed the council's commitment to the initiative.

"I am assuring the Sightsavers that Augie local government council will give all the necessary support and cooperation to eradicate trachoma and ensure that Augie becomes open defecation-free," he assured.

His remarks highlighted the crucial role of local government leadership in mobilising communities, enforcing sanitation standards, and supporting public health initiatives.

Similarly, the Imam of Yola village, Malam Hafiz Abubakar, emphasised the influence of religious leaders in shaping community behaviour.

He urged traditional rulers and clerics to intensify advocacy on sanitation and hygiene.

He pledged the commitment of participating religious leaders to cascade the knowledge acquired to their followers by using different religious gatherings to ensure the message reached the grassroots.

In their various contributions, representatives of traditional institutions expressed readiness to disseminate the knowledge gained to their subjects.

They also committed to sustained public enlightenment, encouraging the culture of frequent hand-washing and improved personal hygiene.

Beyond advocacy, the meeting examined structural and institutional gaps undermining sanitation efforts.

Participants suggested that government should re-introduce routine household and environmental surveillance by environmental sanitation personnel, popularly known as 'Duba Gari', to address hygiene challenges more effectively.

The stakeholders also stressed the need for continuous public enlightenment on sanitation and hygiene, while recommending the establishment of environment and hygiene taskforces at the local government level, with traditional rulers playing active roles as members.

Reinforcing the state government's position, the Permanent Secretary of the Kebbi State Ministry of Environment, Alhaji Abubakar Ahmed, acknowledged the ministry's responsibility in eliminating trachoma and other NTDs.

He was represented by Mr Dantani Sarki, Chairman of the Taskforce on Environmental Sanitation.

Ahmed assured that the ministry was committed to providing the necessary support to eradicate trachoma from Augie, noting that improved sanitation and hygiene remained central to preventing disease transmission.

From the water and sanitation perspective, Malam Muhammad Lawal-Gwandu of the Rural Water Supply and Sanitation Agency (RUWASSA) disclosed that the agency had been working in Augie for over three years to address water and sanitation challenges.

He assured that RUWASSA was fully ready to support efforts to make Augie an open defecation-free area, recognising the link between access to clean water, sanitation and the elimination of trachoma.

Adding an international development perspective, UNICEF representative, Mr Toyin Adisa, lamented that neglected tropical diseases disproportionately affect poor and rural populations.

He assured that UNICEF would continue to support interventions until Augie achieved its open defecation-free target, stressing that sustained partnerships were essential to breaking the cycle of disease and poverty.

At the centre of Sightsavers' intervention is the WHO-recommended SAFE strategy for trachoma elimination.

Explaining the approach, the Country Director of Sightsavers Nigeria, Prof. Joy Shu'aibu, said the organisation's work focused on integrated, evidence-based solutions.

"Sightsavers protects sight, eliminates diseases, fights for equality and with support of all, it can do even more," she said.

Shu'aibu explained that SAFE stands for Surgery for advanced cases to correct inward-growing eyelashes, Antibiotics through mass drug administration to reduce infection, Facial cleanliness to prevent transmission, and Environmental improvement through better water, sanitation and waste management.

She noted that antibiotics, often azithromycin, help reduce bacterial load, while regular face washing and improved sanitation reduce fly breeding and reinfection.

According to her, the "Sanitation and Hygiene Awareness and Sensitisation Meeting" was deliberately organised to bring all stakeholders together to understand and appreciate simple, community-level actions that can eliminate trachoma and other NTDs.

She stressed the importance of coordinated efforts across health, water and environmental sectors, adding that government support remained vital for large-scale antibiotic distribution and infrastructure projects such as boreholes.

Shu'aibu disclosed that Sightsavers, in collaboration with other non-governmental organisations, continued to work tirelessly to ensure the success of the ongoing mission in Kebbi.

"We are happy our royal fathers, community and religious leaders as well as representatives from the State Ministries of Environment, Education and Health are here to deliberate on ways to put an end to trachoma and other neglected tropical diseases," she said.

She expressed optimism that the collective deliberations would yield tangible outcomes for the people of Augie Local Government Area, Kebbi State and Nigeria at large.

As the engagement concluded, Shu'aibu commended the commitment and enthusiasm demonstrated by all stakeholders, calling it 'a strong foundation for sustainable disease elimination'.

Ultimately, stakeholders agree that the Yola community experience demonstrates that combating trachoma is not only a medical challenge but also a shared responsibility requiring coordinated action.

With sustained community engagement, strong leadership, and coordinated action by all stakeholders, preventable blindness can be eradicated, ensuring that no one suffers from a disease that is entirely avoidable.

Allowance review: Hope for civil servants amid economic strain?

BY OKON OKON

The recent approval of increased peculiar allowances and welfare benefits for Federal Civil Servants has sparked renewed hope among workers battling the harsh realities of rising inflation, high transportation costs and dwindling purchasing power.

For many employees in the Federal Public Service, the announcement by the Head of the Civil Service of the Federation, Mrs Didi Walson-Jack, came as a welcome relief at a time when many households are struggling to cope with the nation's current economic pressures.

The review, which covers peculiar allowances and other welfare packages across cadres, is expected to improve workers' take-home pay, morale and productivity.

Across ministries, departments and agencies (MDAs), reactions have reflected a mixture of optimism, cautious expectation and calls for prompt implementation.

For Ms Benita Solomon, a widow and mother of three said, the development offers a crucial source of support.

"Life has not been easy for every typical civil servant, especially those of us with children and dependents.

"Since the removal of fuel subsidy, it has been from one struggle to another. I sincerely hope this increase is implemented because it will cushion the effects of rising living costs," she said.

Her experience mirrors that of many workers whose salaries have remained under pressure in the face of escalating food prices, school fees and transport fares.

Mrs Esther Ibrahim, a Grade Level 12 officer, said the announcement could provide some breathing space if translated into reality quickly.

"We have heard similar announcements before. What matters now is implementation; food prices are rising daily and salaries no longer meet basic needs," she said.

Indeed, analysts note that while salary and allowance adjustments often generate excitement, workers' confidence depends largely on whether such measures are reflected in monthly payslips without delay.

This explains the scepticism expressed by some workers who say previous welfare pronouncements did not always yield the expected benefits.

Mr Sunday Adeyemi, a senior officer, said many civil servants had learned to wait for practical evidence.

"We have seen policies announced that never got implemented or led to actual increases in take-home pay.

"Many of us will remain cautious until we see the increase reflected in our payslips," he said.

Still, for junior workers and those in lower income brackets, the prospect of improved allowances is significant.

Mr Musa Abu, a junior civil servant, said the increase in Duty Tour Allowance and related benefits would reduce work-related personal expenses.

"Transport, feeding and even training costs sometimes come from our pockets. If these changes take effect, it will make a huge difference," he said.

Observers say this highlights a long-standing challenge within the civil service, where workers often shoulder official expenses pending reimbursement or in the absence of adequate funding.

Another aspect of the reform that has attracted attention is the introduction of an exit benefit scheme.

Miss Ifeoma Okeke said the initiative could restore confidence in the public service and improve workers' outlook toward retirement.

"At least people can look forward to retirement with some dignity. But again, it depends on how faithfully the pronouncements are implemented," she said.

Experts say retirement security remains a major concern for many public servants, particularly amid inflationary pressures that have reduced the real value of pensions and gratuities.

Dr Gideon Maigida, an economist, said although the measures were commendable, inflation could weaken the intended gains.

"Increasing allowances improves disposable income, but if inflation, especially food inflation, remains high, the real benefit may be limited," he said.

He urged government to complement the wage-related reforms with policies that boost food supply, support agriculture and stabilise prices.

Similarly, public finance analyst, Mrs Adenike Adeusi, said the reforms could raise morale and productivity if effectively managed.

"When workers feel supported, output improves. However, government must ensure fiscal sustainability to avoid creating future financial pressures," she said.

According to her, transparency in implementation will be critical in rebuilding trust between workers and government.

Many workers also see the review as recognition of the sacrifices made by civil servants who continue to provide essential services despite economic constraints.

Mrs Ngozi Eze of the Ministry of Transportation said the development would inspire greater dedication.

"When workers feel valued, they become more committed to their duties. This increase will motivate many of us to give our best and improve service delivery," she said.

Mr Ibrahim Musa shared similar sentiments, noting that the increase would help workers cope with transportation, housing and feeding costs.

"With the current economic realities, many workers have found it difficult to meet basic needs. This increase will go a long way," he said.

However, some stakeholders insist that allowances alone may not be sufficient to address broader welfare concerns.

Mr Sani Abdullahi called for regular review of salaries, pensions and workplace conditions.

"It should not stop at allowances alone; there should be comprehensive welfare policies that protect workers and retirees," he said.

Mr Patrick Odey, another civil servant, said workers had become cautious about government promises because some previous approvals were yet to be fully implemented.

Odey said although the announcement was commendable, many workers would wait to see the actual payment before celebrating.

"Sometimes, when they promise, it may remain on paper; we have had cases like wage awards that workers are still expecting.

"But if this one is implemented, it will strengthen workers financially and improve morale," he said.

He noted that the cost of hotel accommodation during official trips had risen sharply, making previous duty tour allowances inadequate.

"Anywhere you go now, it is difficult to get a hotel room for less than N30,000 or N50,000, so the old rates could not meet realities," he said.

He, however, expressed concern that many Ministries, Departments and Agencies (MDAs) had not carried out official tours or training programmes in recent years due to lack of funds.

Analysts say the current development underscores the growing importance of worker welfare in sustaining an efficient and motivated public service.

They note that as government pursues economic reforms, balancing fiscal discipline with social protection for workers will remain a delicate but necessary task.

For now, the announcement has rekindled hope among thousands of federal workers.

Nonetheless, the consensus is that the ultimate test lies in rapid implementation and measurable impacts on living standards, far outweighing the initial promises.

Tasha Dagi: The pepper market powering Kebbi's rural economy

BY LAWAL TAOFEK

Every Friday, hundreds of farmers from across Kebbi converge on Tasha Dagi market in Jega Local Government Area with sacks of dried pepper.

The weekly trade sustains a network that stretches from northern Nigeria to parts of West Africa.

Although relatively unknown outside the state, the market has become an important hub where farmers, traders and transporters meet to exchange dried pepper, a commodity that eventually finds its way to major Nigerian cities and neighbouring countries.

Jega, one of the oldest commercial towns in Kebbi State, has historically served as a link between northern Nigeria, the Southwest and neighbouring countries.

Its strategic location along major routes has over the years supported the movement of agricultural produce and locally made goods.

Located along Mayawa Road, near the southern exit of Jega town, Tasha Dagi market has grown into a major centre for dried pepper trade.

Every market day, farmers arrive with their harvest from different communities, while wholesalers and transporters gather to buy and move the commodity to various destinations.

During a visit by the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) to the market on Friday, the atmosphere reflected the scale of the weekly trade.

Farmers arrived in motorcycles, commercial vehicles and hired trucks carrying bags of carefully dried pepper, while traders inspected the quality of the produce before making purchases.

At another section of the market, truck drivers waited to load consignments heading to Lagos, Ibadan, Ilorin, Niger Republic, Ghana, Togo and Benin Republic.

For many farmers, Tasha Dagi is more than just a market; it is a source of livelihood that has supported families for years.

Nigeria's dried pepper trade extends well beyond its borders, with markets such as Tasha Dagi playing a vital role in connecting smallholder farmers to regional supply chains.

The commodity remains one of the country's important agricultural exports to West Africa and other international markets.

According to international trade data, Nigeria exported about 1.57 million kilogrammes of dried pepper in 2023, with Ghana accounting for the largest share by volume.

Other export destinations included India, Israel, Spain, the United Kingdom and Benin Republic.

In 2022, Nigeria exported about 1.94 million kilogrammes of dried pepper, reflecting the country's growing presence in regional spice trade in spite of challenges such as rising transportation costs, inadequate infrastructure and post-harvest losses.

Although much of the pepper traded through rural aggregation centres is consumed locally or moves through informal cross-border channels that are not fully captured in official statistics, stakeholders say markets like Tasha Dagi play a critical role in Nigeria's agricultural trade.

They say the market links smallholder farmers to buyers, strengthens agricultural value chains and supports livelihoods across Nigeria and neighbouring West African countries.

Speaking with NAN, a farmer, Isa Maiyalo from Maiyalo town in Mayawa Local Government Area, said he had been involved in pepper farming and trading for about 20 years.

"I started with two or three bags, but gradually I increased my business. After harvesting my pepper, I also buy from other farmers and sell at this market," he said.

Maiyalo explained that rising fuel prices had affected transportation costs and contributed to an increase in the price of dried pepper.

Day address of the President of the Federal Republic of Nigeria should adequately address these critical issues.

"Consequently, the council states that failure by the Federal Government to take the necessary steps to address these issues on or before 30th September 2026 will leave Nigerian workers with no option but to commence a three-day warning strike, with effect from Friday, 2nd October 2026, to press home their demands."

Olowoyo said the council had on September 21 written a letter to Tinubu in which it made the three demands, including the commencement of negotiations for a minimum wage of not less than N500,000 from 2027, among others.

It, however, expressed displeasure that no visible action had been taken on the stated demands more than a week after the letter.

approximately 700,000 barrels of crude per day, it will also generate 1,000 megawatt twice that of Lagos," he said.

"We have 1 million tons of polypropylene and we also have a base oil production that we'll supply and also we will supply at least 20 percent of jet fuel consumed by Europe and the UK, like what we did during this crisis.

"If not because of the Dangote refinery, a lot of people wouldn't have had the chance to go on summer holiday in Europe, so we're very proud to say that Africa is helping Europe to get jet fuel."

Dangote said the group would not merely build tanks, pipelines, processing units, and jetties, but it would establish an industrial ecosystem.

"From our experience in Nigeria, this will give birth to an industrial zone, an ecosystem of energy, petrochemicals, logistics, engineering, marine services, manufacturing skills, technology, small and medium-sized enterprise and thousands of opportunities for people across the value chain," he said.

Dangote also said he would establish a training school to train 1,000 Kenyan engineering graduates.

Also speaking, Ruto said the project is set to transform the energy and industrial landscape of Kenya and the region.

"This is bigger than a refinery. It is an investment in energy security, industrialisation, and regional integration," he said.

, Commander 651 BSG, Ikeja and Dr Ayodele Ogunsan, Executive Secretary, Lagos State Security Trust Fund (LASTF).

Also there were Chief of Staff to the Governor Tayo Ayinde, Secretary to the State Government Abimbola Hundeyin and Commissioner for Justice and Attorney General Lawal Pedro.

Lagos will host President Bola Ahmed Tinubu GCFR as from today. Several activities are being lined up for the Yuletide when an influx of visitors is expected. Besides, various religious and cultural activities. Also, political activities are picking up, following the announcement by the Independent National Electoral Commission (INEC) that campaigns can begin.

The JNPSNC national secretary said reducing petrol price can be achieved through the provision of an intervention fund to address the landing costs of the commodity and support oil and gas operators.

It is equally important for the Federal Government to ensure the sale of crude oil to the Dangote Refinery and operators of modular refineries at appropriate terms to facilitate increased domestic refining and help bring down the price of petroleum products," Olowoyo said.
